In this project, the genetic linkage relationship of relevant aspects of the carnitine defect, together with the unique properties of the mammalian peroxisome for the study of biochemical genetics are proposed as a general basis for the molecular characterization of this group of inherited diseases. The detection and characterization of the genetic loci for the carnitine defect will lead to the genetic diagnosis of peroxisomal disorders, permit the identification of homozygotes for those genes, indicate the carrier state in at-risk individuals, and give a basis for prenatal diagnosis. The genetic study of fibroblasts from patients with peroxisomal disorders will enable us to place these disorders in the context of other inborn errors of metabolism, in order to gain further insight into their pathogenesis. The genetic testing of this group of disorders is complicated by their heterogeneity and the number of human genes involved, but it can be enhanced by the use of the tools available to geneticists for the genetic testing of single genes in common disorders. Moreover, the Peroxisome Diseases and Genetic Toxicology Research Project Group at Southern Research Institute has extensive experience in the genetic characterization of single gene defects and in the performance of human genetic testing. The detailed description of the procedure followed for the genetic testing of the known peroxisomal genes in this proposal can be applied to other genes of interest once they are identified./* * Copyright (c) 2014 The WebM project authors.
